ALL THREE FOUND GUILTY.

VERDICT OF THE CORONER'S JURY ON THE LUCA BUTCHERY.

BicElvaine Did the Stabbing and His Companions Were Accessories-Mrs. Luca's Story of the Murder-The Murderer Fully Identified-Confessions from Each

The inquest on the Luca butchery was held by Coroner Lindsay last evening in the Raymond Street Jail, Brooklyn. Assistant District-Attorneys John A. Shorter and John F. Clarke appeared for the people, but took no part in the inquest. Andrew J. Spenser, who has been retained to defend the prisoners, was not recognized by the Coroner.

The fifteen-year-old wife of McElvaine was the first witness. She told her story without a tremor in a low voice and apparently unconcornedly. McElvaine was brought in and sat next to his wife, but was not allowed to speak to her. During the most affecting parts of the testimony he laughed. He expects to get free on the plea of self-defense. Dineen and Quinlan sat next to him.

Mrs. McElvaine said: "On the evening of Aug. 21 I left home at 6 o'clock with my husband, Charles McElvaine. I went to my mother's at No. 243 Cherry street, York, and stayed there until 10.30. My husband left about 8 o'clock. He returned with Thomas Quinlan and Michael Dineen, and then we crossed Catharine Ferry, and on the boat my husband wanted to cut a hole in a match-box, and borrowed a knife from Dineen." Witness identified the knife used in the murder as the one. They reached home about 11 o'clock, and Quinone. ian sent out for beer. There was no conversation about robbery. Shortly all went to bed Quinlan requested to be called at 2 o'clock. At that time they all got up. There was no tall then about robbery. The three men then went out. That was the last she saw of them. She denied having been to Luca's bouse to look for Mrs. Luca then said she and her husband went to bed between 10 and 11 o'clock. The doors were locked, but the windows were open. Between 3 and 4 o'clock she was awak Her hu-band was out of bed. I thought my husband had got up to go to market, I opened the door to the back room and saw my husband hold-ing a man and the man hitting him. I didn't think he was stabbing him, but my husband told me he was. He was down or one knee.

"That's the man who killed him," said Mrs. Luca, pointing out McElvaine, and sob-bing again, "I got hold of him and so did the girl, and he said, 'I've stabled him, and if you don't let go I'll stab you both.' I let go. He then jumped from the window and went out. There was a ladder in the rear of the yard.

Witness said her husband died almost in-Miss Meta Preuss, the domestic in the Luca family, corroborated Mrs. Luca's story, and identified McElvaine as the man who stabbed her employer.

Patrolman James A. Kennedy, of the Second Patrolman James A. Kennedy, of the Second Precinct, who arrested McElvaine, testified that he saw McElvaine with his shoes in his hands and pulled his revoiver, and in cried out, "Please don't shoot." He took the man back to Line's home and all in the room identified him as the man who did the stabbing. "I forced him oward Grocer Luca, and said. "Is this the man? Luca couldn't speak, but he made a faint nod. I searched McElvaine and found a knife, matchbox and a latch-key on his person:" searched McElvaine and found a knife, matchoex and a latch-key on his person:

The knife was produced by the Coroner and de tified by the witness. He also found clots of blood on McElvaine a clothing.

Policeman Philip F. Cassidy, of the Second Precinct, testified as to the arrest of Quinian and McElvaine and identified the latter.

Capt. John W. Eason, of the Second Precinct, produced confessions made by McElvaine, Quinand Dissen, deta due the particulars of the our lary and murder as deta led by the witnesses. Quinian denset having participated, but was with the party early in the evening.

The jury returned a verdict that Luca came to assentiat the ham. If McElvaine, and that all direc were guilty of nomicide,

Se Artist Furlang Desired a Clean Bill of BOSTON, Aug. 27.—When Atherton Furlong was doing a big laundry business in this town years ago, nobody suspected that he would in the Saratoga Summer season of 1889 figure in so romantic a serial sensation as that recounted in THE WORLD to-day. From laundryman to artist was such a leap that it was hard to recognize it with what was known of the man's personality. But, being a plausible yet erratic chap, those who knew him intimately were not altogether surprised. However, Atherton, the attogether surprised. However, Atherton, the artist, is by no means the muchly injured and long-suffering husband the Saratoga despatch makes him out to be—that is, viewed from the standpoint of his divorced wife and her friends. standpoint of his divorced wife and her friends. standpoint of his divorced wife and her friends. Mrs. Furlong that was, so they say, went to Saratoga not in search of her husband to demand back from him the letters disparaging to her good name, but simply to enjoy herself as the invited guest of Dr. and Mrs. Robinson, of Roxbury, who knew and pitied her for the missfortunes she had passed through.

Arrived in Saratoga, she saw her husband hurrying through the hotel. He had learned of her presence there and the next day sought an interview with her friend. Dr. Robinson, and the Boston lawyer, Samuel Thompson. Foolishly they accepted the artist's invitation to visit his studio. Once there Atherton Furlong, smooth-tongued as of yore, confided to their astonished ears a secret. He—he was in love. He was about to be married. He had won the hand of a beautiful Naratoga Summer girl, but the mischief-making gossips had dealt unkindly with his reputation. Wicked whisperers had said that he could not paint a little bit that his pictures, inatesed of being born of his natural genius, were made after the Diss Debar or some other equally mysterious fashion, and that instead of heing an artist Atherton Furlong was merely a laundryman, or at least a graduate of an institution where the art and science of washing and ironing is the chief and only course. Consequently he wanted these Boston gentlemen to sign a paper properly drawn up and giving him a clean bill of character.

"Not much," said the Bostonians. "We know you and all about you. You must go elsewhere for your certificate of good character. Good day."

Then Furlong began to threaten. He said he where for your certificate of good character. Good day.

Then Furlong began to threaten. He said he would open up the divorce given to his wife on the ground of his desertion and non-support. That ended the so-called negotiations, which were entirely on his side and in no sense sought or considered by the wife.

The Boston party learned that Atherton was a veritable lady-killer. He gave soirces and musticales in his studio to his lady friends and never lost an opportunity to read some of his poetic effusions. He also wept over them himself. Here is one:

Alone, all alone thro' the long dreaming night,
How the waves of the past rush in on the shore;
How their messories haunt me, like ghosts that won't down.

And beat 'gainat my heart with their stiffing rear.

I can feel a cold mist, like dead arms, clasp me tight, can feel a cold mist, like dead arms, clasp me tight, Feel the strings of my heart by some spirit hand swept; can hear a weird chant o'er the days that are past. And a low, murmured sigh for the vicils I've kept.

Residents in the neighborhood of One Hundred and Fifty-fifth street and Ninth avenu were startled yesterday afternoon by a hear rumbling sound, dull and labored grunts ar the clatter of many feet. People not acquainte with the circumstances looked at each other with interrogation marks in their eyes, at turned suspicious glances upon the clear ar innocent sky. Later on a long line of gloom looking men emerged from the high-walled inclosure known as the Polo Grounds, staggering under loads of shady expressions. "Smatter over that?" asked a one-eyed truck driver, luffing up on the starboard rein of a weather-beaten mule. "Tobogganed agin," senten-tiously replied a mournful-looking bleacher. Well, they be jim-whizzled," said the truck were all lim-whizzled, whatever that means, and it was a hard matter to tell who had the worst case of jim-whizzles. PITTSBURG, Aug. 27.—Pittsburg was treated to another double game of ball to-day, and as usual it proved a sec-saw. Getzein pitched great ball in the first game. Staley was wild, and in the seventh inning gave way to Sowders, a ball from Denny's bat striking him full in the face and knocking him down. Pittsburg nar-rowly escaped a shut-out by making one in the eighth on Duniap's base on balls after two were out, a passed ball and Sowders's single. The

The Eighth Settled It.

INFECIAL TO THE WORLD.)
CINCINSATI, Aug. 27.—The Louisvilles gave the Cincinnatis a hard fight in to-day's game up to the eighth inning, when the local men pounded out a single, a double, two three-baggers and as many home runs. Holliday made one of the longest home-run hits that has been seen on the gr-unds this searon. The ball went over the left field picket fence on the first bound. The score: ... 37 10 14 27 P 1 l'otals . Bhannon, 2h 2 2 Herker, 1b 4 0 Wolf, rf. 4 0 10 10 Totals.......33 4 8 27 19 4 1 0 7 3 0
